2014 marked a monumental year in the history of the cannabis industry launching a 700 million dollar recreational market in its first year with over $44,000,000 in tax revenue collected, with a total of $76,000,000 in state fees from the program to date. With Colorado and Washington leading the way, our nation is allowing for a new market to emerge that will boost our economic outlook. This past year will prove important in Colorado, as the end of vertical integration will allow for more free-market opportunities in the cannabis industry. Now that one can apply for a business license for a stand-alone grow, store, or production facility, it's a time where people can chase the American dream to be a prosperous business owner doing what they love.

Since legalization in 2012, Colorado's cannabis market has set a national precedence and captured the eyes of major financing companies, investors, and stock firms nationally. The market has been growing at an exponential rate, with an estimated Billion dollars in sales coming in the next fiscal year. As legalization spreads, the market will climb from 110,000 patients to four billion people in the world who are 21 and up, reports the NY Times. Taxes in Colorado were 14 million alone in the first months of recreational sales and will have totaled an estimated 75 million by 2015. Over 10,000 people are now employed in the Colorado Marijuana Industry which is as many as are employed by law enforcement.

The recent economic statistics coming out of Colorado are staggering. Some of the first real data estimates that Colorado consumed 286,000 pounds of marijuana by August 2014. Understand that this is one small piece of the national market telling the story of just how big this opportunity is. Colorado tourism has skyrocketed, funneling in billions of dollars to the state economy. The opportunity to be part of this explosive growth market is a once-in-a-lifetime chance. Business owners that get in on the ground floor can capture large parts of the market within Colorado, and beyond as barriers drop in the rest of our nation. Join this event to be part of where it all happens first, the Cannabis Business Conference.

With National Legalization on the horizon and national market opportunities becoming available, the fast advancements and potential in Cannabis have made this undoubtably one of the fastest growing industries in America today.

Join us as we discuss the investment potential, pitfalls, financial aspects, and in-depth business opportunities from leading financial experts, industry leaders, and business professionals from state to state and national marijuana business markets.

Glendale Mayor, Mike Dunafon,

The antithesis of a professional politician, Mayor Mike Dunafon is fiercely independent and refuses to accept any money from anyone. Mike believes that both the Democrats on the left and the Republicans on the right have sold out America pandering for their share of corporate and PAC money. He understands that the intellectual elites running the Democrats want to control your decisions because they know better than you, what is best for you and your family. Mike fundamentally rejects this idea and big government categorically, and believes that we need to reverse our current path toward socialism, by creating more liberty and less government. On the other side of the spectrum, Mike also rejects the imposition of religious intolerance by segments within the Republican Party, specifically on the social issues of reproductive liberty and marital equality. These social matters are best resolved by adopting public policy choices that promote liberty for women (over their bodies) and marriage equality for all couples, irrespective of sexual orientation.

Nate Jackson is from San Jose, CA. He attended Pioneer High School and Menlo College, and went on to play six seasons for the Denver Broncos. He is the author of the book, "SLOW GETTING UP", and currently lives in LA.

In that time, he also served as managing editor of CULTURE Magazine's Colorado publication and freelanced for Village Voice Media, Kush Magazine, and The Hemp Connesseur. He's also a former partner at Denver Relief Consulting, working primarily with ancillary businesses and edibles manufacturers, until a successful exit in 2014 when he became the first marijuana critic for a major newspaper when joining the Denver Post's The Cannabist. Additionally, Jake is the co-founder of HempBox, a subscription service that promotes consumer goods made with industrial hemp, and is the lead content editor for World Cannabis Week. He has been featured in the New York Times, Wall St. Journal, CBS This Morning, and more.

Pot Barons of Colorado and People Magazine “Marijuana Millionaires” Expert Cannabis Business Speakers

Pot Barons of Colorado - Various Speakers

Thanksgiving weekend 2014, MSNBC premiered “Pot Barons of Colorado” a six-part documentary series which followed the stories of Colorado-based ‘pot barons’ who risked everything to secure a foothold in the rapidly expanding world of recreational marijuana use. On New Year’s Day 2014, the nation’s first legal recreational marijuana dispensaries opened in Colorado. The demand for legal weed stunned the experts, effectively launching a 21st century “green rush.” From dispensaries to grow houses, “Pot Barons of Colorado” delves into the thrilling and suspenseful world of Colorado’s recreational marijuana businesses as they race to cash in on this unprecedented boom. Come and meet the Pot Barons of Colorado.

Marijuana Millionaires - Various Speakers

Not surprisingly, entrepreneurs are cashing in on this budding industry. PEOPLE spoke to four, most of whom had previous careers: as event planners, commercial bankers, paralegals, venture capitalists. "I was raised very traditionally," says Tripp Keber, who after college worked for a conservative think tank in his native Washington, D.C. "Marijuana was certainly not acceptable in our home." Now these newly minted moguls are providing jobs, paying taxes (an estimated $134 million this year) and navigating the strict regulations and ambiguities of an industry that - while illegal on the federal level - may rack up $1 billion in sales this year.

Tripp Keber , Dixie Elixirs, and MSNBC’s Pot Baron and People Magazine Marijuana Millionaires

“When people hear Keber is the king of Colorado's edible marijuana products, most ask about pot brownies.” So clichéd! Anybody can make a pot brownie," moans Keber, a purveyor of 115 pot-infused sodas, mints and candies. His is a tricky part of the industry: In May the state passed legislation to protect kids from sweets containing pot after children ended up in the ER. Even adults with college memories of funky brownies need to use caution, so each of his products lists the amount of the psychoactive chemical THC it contains. Losing three friends on Sept. 11, 2001, "had a profound impact" on Keber, and the newly divorced dad - his daughter was 2 at the time - wanted a fresh start. So Keber, a venture capitalist, sold his dot-com company in 2002 and moved from D.C. to Colorado with plans to retire. But in time the entrepreneur in him was roused: "The opportunity to profit was there." Today he employs more than 40 people, including chefs and biochemists. But his rise hasn't been without a few flops: Pot ice cream never caught on. Says Keber: "I thought it was going to be a home run." - People Magazine, Vol. 82 #4

Brooke Gehring, Patients Choice/Live Green, People Magazine Marijuana Millionaires, Cannabis Business Executive 2014

Brooke is the Managing Member & Owner: Colorado 7 Investment. "During her straitlaced days as a commercial banker, Gehring never "expected that marijuana would be an income source or a career path." But that changed in 2009, as Gehring discovered that clients came to her with one purpose: "to cultivate marijuana." Before long the analytically minded Miami University grad had learned everything she could about local and federal marijuana laws. After borrowing cash from her "extremely conservative" family, she started building her weed empire, Patient's Choice, which consists of four medical and recreational dispensaries, two cultivation facilities, 85 employees and two new partners. In the first six months of 2014, Gehring, who dates another pot-shop owner, sold recreational bud to more than 65,000 customers. That's a lot of Benjamins - and taxes. Since January, Gehring claims to have paid more than a million in state and federal fees - all of it delivered in cash, with armed guards in tow. ("In my past life, years would go by and I wouldn't even see cash.") While most of her windfall gets invested back into her business, she has plenty left over for travel, artwork for her new home and "my handbag collection." - People Magazine, Vol. 82 #4

Chloe Villano, CEO Clover Leaf, President Clover Leaf University People Magazine MJ Millionaires, Industry Business Executive

Chloe Villano, Executive Director: Cannabis Business Association, CEO & Founder: Clover Leaf Consulting & Clover Leaf University "Villano doesn't sell marijuana, but she has made a small fortune - $2 million, according to her records - untangling the complicated business issues for those who do. For instance, can you market weed for recreational use if you're licensed to sell medical marijuana? (Answer: Nope.) The former bikini model and event planner was working as a paralegal in 2009 when she started fielding questions from clients interested in the medical-marijuana biz. Now Villano is the go-to cannabis consultant, charging $100 an hour for advice on licensing, branding, mergers and acquisitions. A self-described "workaholic," she began the first accredited marijuana university (offering courses like Cannabis Business Marketing 101 and Intro to Greenhouse) and an industry awards show. Some of the proceeds from the show go to a children's charity, and she is starting a trade association to help those who want to enter the field even beyond Colorado's borders. (Medical use is legal in 22 states.) Still, Villano, who drives a 10-year-old Mercedes, says, "I've never felt that I've 'made it.' Anything can happen. If the feds decided to shut down every business in this state, did we make it?" - People Magazine, Vol. 82 #4

Georgia C. Edson, LCSW, iCannabis Radio

After obtaining a Masters in Social Work with a concentration in chemical dependency treatment, this wife and mother worked in an out-patient and in-patient drug treatment programs. She spent 15 years addressing State and Federal compliance issues for Medicaid program recipients.

After leaving a very traditional job, Georgia “came out of the legalization closet.” As a mother she found it important that she ensured her 10 year old son understood the truth about drugs – including cannabis. Because she wanted her son to live in a world that makes as much sense as possible, she realized that she had to stand up and voice her opinion about cannabis legalization. This led her to creating the organization, Run on Grass. The philosophy is that legalization advocates come in all shapes and sizes, and can be found doing a variety of activities – working toward ending the myth of the “stoner” stereotype, with the ultimate goal of cannabis legalization. Because distance running was her activity of choice, she chose to start there. Runners gather and participate in run events under the team name Run on Grass in order to open dialogues about cannabis.

Georgia’s desire is to ensure there are open avenues for cannabis education and a place centered on personal freedoms. She started an internet radio station, iCannabis Radio (www.iCannabisRadio.com) where she hosts a weekly show focused on cannabis news, laws, entertainment and advocacy. Each show on the station, focuses on different aspects of cannabis from news, to hemp to parenting to sex and everything in between. iCannabis Radio has listeners from all over the world and addresses topics pertinent to a diverse audience.
