

Answered Prayers: Old School Labs™ Signs Trainer Rebecca Stowe as Brand Ambassador

Inspiring trainer and aspiring NPC Figure competitor Rebecca Stowe joins Old School Labs promotional team as first female brand ambassador.

LOS ANGELES, CA - March 24, 2015 – Old School Labs™, creator of the all-natural sports supplements Vintage Burn™, Vintage Build™ and Vintage Blast™, has fulfilled a longtime goal by signing its first female brand ambassador, Indiana resident Rebecca Stowe. The physical education instructor, wellness coach, and Occupational Therapy student becomes the first woman to join the company's promotional team, which includes such luminaries as bodybuilding icon and former Mr. Uruguay Mario da Silva and martial arts champ Timothy "Timbo" Harrell.

"We had been looking for a female ambassador for some time," says Old School Labs founder and CEO Tarek Sidani. "And though we were approached by dozens of models and fitness trainers, none of them seemed quite right. When we interviewed Rebecca, we were just blown away by her sincerity and by how committed she was to helping others. We knew immediately that we'd found our ambassador."

For Stowe, being signed by the celebrated supplement maker was literally the answer to her prayers. "What made me first focus on fitness as a vocation was my desire to help people feel better about themselves in order to lead more fulfilling lives. And I prayed for an opportunity to be able to do what I love, while reaching as many people as possible. I was thrilled to find Old School Labs products, which I know I can recommend to my clients without having to worry about side effects. I genuinely believe in this company and I can't wait to work with them."

Stowe's future plans include not only entering the NPC Figure and other bodybuilding competitions, but also becoming more deeply involved in personal and group training. Not surprisingly, she sees her partnership with Old School Labs as a match made in heaven. Sidani echoes her views:

"Rebecca has had an amazing fitness journey and wants to share what she's learned with others. As someone who had been overweight and worked hard to get where she is, she's a great role model, especially for our many female customers. We're looking forward to working with her and, together, helping people get in the best shape of their lives."
