There are enormous problems with the housing market in South Florida.

Recently the South Florida market for houses has been flooded with significantly underpriced homes. This leaves many people asking themselves, should we buy houses? University of Miami Professor emeritus of real estate at the University of Miami Business Administration, Agnes J. effects of foreclosure in South Florida are amongst the highest percentage of people negatively affected in the nation by the ongoing housing crisis. Miami neighborhood homeowners are still struggling to make ends meet or get out from under lenders that are threatening to foreclose on their homes.

In order to protect home and family many say it stands to experts are recommending that all potential owners who are missing or late on mortgage payments become familiar with South Florida's foreclosure process and the South Florida foreclosure laws. This task can be monumental to homeowners who are facing stressful levels of financial hardship. The recent housing "bubble" burst still has the nation's economy struggling to recover and fewer people who feel it's best if we buy houses. South Florida homeowners find themselves "underwater" when it comes to the value to debt ratio of their home at a higher percentage rate than those who own homes in most other states.

In a recent public address President Obama stated, “This housing crisis struck right at the heart of what it means to be middle class in America: our homes, the place where we can invest our nest egg, place where we raise our family, the place where we plant roots in the community, the place where we build memories.” Many people in South Florida feel that the need to announce that the State’s motto should still be that “We buy houses South Florida.” South Florida residents want to be able to feel safe in following that long-term investment plan. President Obama recently announced a proposal to lower lending rates, making it possible for millions of borrowers who have not been able to get out from under bloated mortgages to refinance their homes. This plan also proposes to offer hope to those who want to afford to purchase a home. Many agree with Obama who stated that: “It is wrong for anyone to suggest that the only option for struggling homeowners is to sit and wait for the market to hit bottom.” Many people are thinking, “Why should we buy houses?” South Florida is no different.
