

Do Business Grants Really Exist?

By Michelle Gordon

Have you ever thought about starting a for-profit or non-profit business? According to the Gallup polls, “one-quarter of Americans said they’ve considered becoming business owners but decided not to.” If you decided not to start a business, think again. Everyday thousands of individuals take the plunge into entrepreneurship and philanthropy. Some people save money for years, others fix their credit to get business loans, and many people just start a business because they just can’t find employment. Whatever the underlining reason for start-up, your business can be a successful venture when you utilize the drive within you and dedicate time to successful planning/training. Don’t be a business that dies faster than it is born. Be a successful leader with adequate funding, and top-notch leadership and organizational skills. Although statistics predict that more than half of the new ventures fail in the first five years, you can beat these odds. “Failure is not an option” and if you get training from industry experts, you can be successful and avoid spending hundreds of thousands of dollars and decades in business school. So, here is what you need to do. All businesses should (1) write a business plan (2) write a strategic/funding plan that includes grants and contracts procurement (3) properly execute the plan with exuberant leadership and organizational development and (4) continuously seek knowledge and training from industry experts. There are so many questions that arise when starting a business, but the number one question is “Where do I find money to start my company?” “Do business grants really exist?” Yes! Business grants really exist for non-profit and for-profit organizations. There is money to be made, and you need to get your money now!

You can start a business by developing a business plan, strategic plan, and funding plan that will help you secure grants and contracts to sustain your business. Business grants and contracts can be located on www.grants.gov, www.Fedbizopps.gov, municipal and state organizations and many, many more site. To learn more about business grants, contracts, proposal writing, funding plans and business plans you can register to win entrance to the 2016 International Grants Summit at bit.ly/225Uwky or text GRANTS to 72000.
