CheapOair Predicts the Cheapest Days to Book 2016 Holiday Travel

Leading Online Travel Agency uses cutting-edge data science to help customers find the best holiday travel deals

NEW YORK, November 8, 2016: CheapOair, a leading flights-focused, next generation concierge travel service consisting of a traditional travel agency with a digital front end, has released predictive data on when consumers can get the best deals on their holiday airline tickets.

For the upcoming December holiday season, CheapOair predicts that travelers can save up to 15% on flights if booked November 7th through November 9th. Delay the purchase any longer and prices could rise up to $60 more per ticket.

According to CheapOair's data, average ticket price for round-trip, domestic airfare over these three days is predicted to be $410.25. Beginning November 10th, prices steadily increase through the end of December and reach an average price of $471.93*.

"Our fare predictions for holiday travel are meant to help travelers determine the best time to book and to get them the best deals possible," said David Chodniewicz, AVP of Data Science at CheapOair. "Airlines typically increase in price as demand increases and seats fill. Our fare predictor tool uses cutting edge data science technologies, historical data from the past six years, and over 10 trillion flight searches to learn when airfares are expected to increase and when airline discounts are expected to expire."

*Predicted fares are based on historical data and trends since 2010, and include fuel surcharges, service fees, and taxes for round-trip, domestic travel departing between 12/22 through 12/24.

While this predictive model has historically been accurate within $10, fares may vary by route and travel dates.
