

People-Background-Check.com Allows People to Access and Review Their Growing Digital Profiles

Public Record Access Becomes More Important as Internet Privacy Security Rules are Cancelled by New Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission

People Background Check, the new public records background check service, is known for collecting personal information available publicly online and aggregating it. This information comes from a variety of sources that increases every month and is expected to grow even faster under the current Federal government administration. The new website makes it possible for people to access all of the available information and review their public digital profile as new information is released.

As the Federal Communication Commission's (FCC) internet privacy rules are being reversed, the ability to know and control the information available about one's self is increasingly important. The recent change allows internet service providers (ISPs) to share the web browsing history, location and any other data made available to them through ordinary customer use. These digital profiles of individual people are becoming more extensive and more important to advertisers every day.

The People-Background-Check.com people search engine and background check service includes online content that a person has created or had their name publicly identified with. The current free digital profiles include social network profiles from sites such as Facebook, LinkedIn and Classmates, and videos from several platforms in addition to printed documents that are subsequently published online such as patents, books and other publications.
