ATLANTA, GA (March 2018) -- Atlanta-based Communiqué USA, Inc., announced today its initiative JOY Economics: Creating Better Ways to Live. Work. Play.<sup>SM</sup> created to enlighten and equip people with innovative work/life integration strategies aimed at fostering more happiness, productivity and meaning in life and work. JOY Economics<sup>SM</sup> includes a radio program of the same name, which debuts on Atlanta's 1160 AM on Saturdays at 11 a.m.; and the JOY Economics speaker series.

"A series of learning moments-in-life forced me to take a look at what happens when all the roles I take on become larger than ME," said Shani Godwin, president and CEO of Communiqué USA and live-work-play enthusiasts. "After hitting life's snooze button for a short while, I emerged with my book The Love Project and a blog titled Audible Voices as well as a fierce commitment to help others optimize success by taking care of what matters most."

Live. Work. Play. in Action

With a variety of recent studies pointing to diminished personal lives linked to after-hours work, Communiqué has for a long time discouraged staff from using email after 7 p.m. or weekends and has been recognized in an article titled 'Meet the U.S. Company that Beat France to the Email Ban Idea' for its company policies that puts its philosophy in action. A graduate of the acclaimed Goldman Sachs 10K Small Business program, where she was lauded for her company's vision to heal the world by helping people find more joy at work, Godwin's company has been providing marketing relief and support to stressed-out, overworked marketing departments through staffing support, creative services and HR communications solutions for more than 15 years.

Whether it's as keynote, workshop presenter, team-building facilitator or panelist, Godwin is the perfect additive for any organization looking to transform the way we live and work.
