

Veripages.com Offers New Public Records Search Engine

Comprehensive public records from local, state and federal sources are easily accessible through this single online search engine

The Veripages website and public records search engine became publicly available today. Veripages.com offers access to an extensive combination of public records from national government entities and diverse online sources.

Public records are the official histories of a person's interactions with their federal, state and local governments. Public access to these records is determined by both national and state freedom of information acts. The reason to make records public is based on the belief that societies function best when all the people have access to the truth.

Information found through Veripages.com can be used to verify the identity and personal history or background of every personal interaction. It allows people to get familiar with coworkers, new friends and acquaintances, or find old friends.

The universal search engine of Veripages.com provides access to official records from across the country and across the web. This allows every person in the country to check the professional history, criminal convictions, marriage records and even speeding tickets. The search results are organized into categories including; Current Contact Information, Professional Records, Business Records, Resumes, Publications, aggregated News, Videos and Images related to the subject person. These comprehensive profiles can include; current and recent addresses, phone numbers, email addresses, court reports, criminal records and extensive civil records including; marriages, divorces, evictions, foreclosures, professional licenses, businesses and judgments.

To access public records in the past required visiting each county records office and court. A person would need to fill out forms and pay separate retrieval fees, then wait weeks for results to arrive in the mail. In fact, most cities and states still fulfil individual information requests this same way. Veripages gathers all this same information and makes it easily searchable online.

The information found through Veripages.com may include all the amazing, accurate details needed. Veripages public records archive is updated daily to help people find the latest information and the deepest historical records available from any single source.
