Codan Communications
launches new generation manpack; providing communications at the tactical edge

24 January, 2019

Ashburn, Virginia
Codan Communications

Building on its successful Software Defined Radio (SDR) products, Codan Communications has developed its latest manpack, the Sentry-H 6110-MP, one of the smallest and lightest tactical manpacks in the market. It complements Codan's other SDR communications and data interoperability products to specifically address the tactical defense market.

"The Sentry-H 6110-MP Software Defined Manpack provides the latest technology allowing for ease of use, affordability and quicker upgrades ensuring our customers have the flexibility required in today's challenging environments", stated Paul Sangster, Executive General Manager, Codan Communications.

Codan has worked extensively with its customers worldwide to identify their needs and ensure that its solutions meet those needs without costly and over-engineered utilities and features which are under or never utilised. Codan's focus is on providing customers only the feature set they need, avoiding an expensive 'one size fits all' architecture, offering solutions that while principally focused at the tactical edge, allow seamless communications and data transfer up to the national level if necessary.

"Codan's ability to support partner forces is second to none because of the reliability, sustainability and ease of use of its products as well as the continued 'support-the-soldier' forward ethos of the company", stated, Lieutenant General Charles Cleveland, US Army retired, Commander US Army Special Operations Command 2012-2015.

Codan will be showcasing its new Sentry-H 6110-MP manpack along with its range of tactical solutions at the forthcoming IDEX tradeshow in Abu Dhabi, booth 01-C07. View Codan's tactical communications and data interoperability product range and global impact here:
