

MetroQuest Wins 2019 Ready to Rocket Technology Award

Rocket Builders has recognized MetroQuest as a top government technology company poised for exceptional growth in 2019.

Vancouver, Canada, March 12, 2019 – MetroQuest, the leader in online public engagement surveys for government agencies and planning firms, was recognized this week as a top private BC company in the information and communications technology (ICT) sector by Rocket Builders. For the third consecutive year, MetroQuest has received the “Ready to Rocket” award for consistently achieving outstanding growth. In 2019, MetroQuest expects to double its growing community of annual subscribers and to grow revenues by 80 to 100 percent.

“After much research into the trends driving growth in the information technology sector, it became clear that MetroQuest is well positioned to capitalize on these trends,” said Geoffrey Hansen, Managing Partner, Rocket Builders.

“I would like to personally thank Rocket Builders and the esteemed panel of judges for recognizing the accomplishments of our world-class team,” said Mike Walsh, President and CEO at MetroQuest. “2018 was a transformative year – we achieved 53% revenue growth, with 75% attributed to annual subscriptions to MetroQuest. The first two months of 2019 have far exceeded forecasts, placing us well on track to double our subscriber base and annual recurring revenues this year.”

MetroQuest surveys are highly visual, engaging, and educational – they are designed to involve thousands of citizens in urban and transportation planning. State departments of transportation, regional planning agencies, local governments, and their consulting firms rely on MetroQuest to optimize online public engagement. With annual subscriptions, agencies can launch unlimited surveys to engage the public in planning, maximize participation, collect informed input, and gain actionable results to better build plans that move more people and enhance livability.
