

Shooter Detection Systems' Gunshot Detection System
Selected as a Security Today New Product of the Year

Advances in IT security and active directory support demonstrate why SDS is the system of choice for security professionals

Rowley, Massachusetts – October 19, 2022 - Shooter Detection Systems, an Alarm.com (NASDAQ: ALRM) company and the leading provider of gunshot detection solutions to schools, governments, and commercial businesses, is proud to announce that the Guardian Wireless Indoor Active Shooter Detection System has been selected by Security Today as one of 2022's New Products of the Year in the category of weapons detection.

The Security Today New Product of the Year program honors the outstanding product development achievements of security technology and solutions manufacturers whose products are considered particularly noteworthy in their ability to improve security. This year the program's independent judges specifically noted the Guardian System's overall improvements in IT security and expanded support for active directory applications.

"Our customers count on us to always be moving forward and find new ways to innovate," said Rich Onofrio, Managing Director of Shooter Detection Systems. "We are very honored to get this recognition from the Security Today judges and we understand how important programs like this one are for demonstrating to security professionals in every industry our commitment to being the solution of choice."

In addition to K-12 and campus environments, SDS serves customers in airports, entertainment venues, manufacturing and distribution facilities, retail and banking, and other locations across the United States. SDS sells the Guardian product through a network of reseller partners who are trained and certified to install and maintain the system.
